Transcript:

Mayor: Hello Kenzo, welcome to Rooftops. This is your host family. Dex, this is Kenzo from Japan.

Dex: Hi Kenzo!

Kenzo: Hello.

Dex's dad: Hello, Kenzo.

Mayor: There's a concert tonight in the town hall. Here are some tickets and some backstage passes!

Dex: Thank you very much.

Narrator: Later that evening ...

Dex: We could go backstage and take some photos.

Look. Here are some big headphones.

And there's an enormous screen!

Look at that projector.

That man is using the video camera to film the concert.

Those speakers are really noisy!

Gina is singing in the microphone.

Have you got your mobile phone, Dex?

The lights are hot.

That's a new laptop.

CULTURE NOTES:

- Britain is a multicultural society, and there are lots of cultural events that originate in other countries. The festival of Diwali, for example, originates in India. It was brought to the UK by immigrants and the tradition is carried on by their descendants today.

Culture Presentation

Nelly: I'm Nelly Telly and you're watching ... Totally Culture! In today's programme we're going ... Totally Music and dance!

Clive: Do you like listening to music, Nelly?

Nelly: Yes, I do!

Clive: What kind of music do you like?

Nelly: I love Indian music and dance!

Clive: Wow! Nelly! You look fantastic!

Nelly: Thanks, Clive. These are special Indian clothes for my dance class.

Clive: That's interesting – I know somebody who loves Indian music and dance too ... Let's watch!

Sanjita: I'm Sanjita and I live with my family in Leicester in England.

In October or November every year my family celebrates Diwali. Diwali is the Hindu festival of lights. For Diwali, we wear special clothes. The clothes are often red, white, silver and gold.

We buy presents for our Friends and family. We sometimes buy gold jewellery ... and sweets! Mmm! I like sweets! We also buy lots of candles. We decorate our homes with candles and colourful decorations.

But my favourite part of Diwali is the music and dancing. My sisters and I go to a dance class. During Diwali we dance on the stage. There are lots of lights and big speakers.

This is Bollywood dancing. It's fun. I could dance when I was ten and my sister could dance when she was six!

We do other traditional dances too. Some people play instruments. This is a traditional Indian drum. My grandpa could play a drum like this when he was a boy.

My family usually take photos with digital cameras or film the dancers and musicians with video cameras. That's my aunty with her mobile phone!

After the dancing, we are tired, but happy. And then it's time for the fireworks ...

Clive Can I come to your dance class too, Nelly?

Nelly Yes, of course! See you next time!

Clive Goodbye!
